The Kremlin said Putin discussed the “outlook for the registration of the Russian Sputnik V vaccine in the EU and possible deliveries and joint production of the vaccine in the EU countries” with Macron and Merkel.

Macron's office said the European Medicines Agency (EMA)'s review of Sputnik V "will be based on the same standards it applies for each vaccine."

According to the Élysée, Macron and Merkel urged Putin to "preserve" jailed Kremlin critic Alexei Navalny's health and respect his human rights.

The Kremlin's statement noted only that Putin provided "explanations of the objective circumstances of [Navalny's] case."

Navalny, who is serving two and a half years in prison for violating parole while recovering abroad from poisoning with a military-grade nerve agent, has complained of severe leg pain and torture-like deprivation of sleep by guards.

The EU, the United States and other Western countries have levied sanctions against Russian officials and entities for Navalny's poisoning and imprisonment.

Macron, Merkel and Putin also discussed the escalation of violence in war-torn eastern Ukraine as well as regional conflicts in Libya and Syria and cooperation on returning Iran to the 2015 nuclear agreement.

The three leaders also discussed the political crisis in Belarus, with Macron and Merkel calling for dialogue with its opposition and Putin criticizing "unacceptable" foreign interference there.
