

Reports of Major Abuses by Russian Mercenaries in C. Africa – UN Experts

By AFP

March 31, 2021

Russia has denied Wagner paramilitaries have been deployed to the country, saying only military instructors have been sent to train Central African Republic soldiers. Zuma / TASS

UN experts expressed concern on Wednesday over reports of "grave human rights abuses" by Russian mercenaries in the Central African Republic, where they have supported the embattled government's military.

"The experts have received, and continue to receive, reports of grave human rights abuses and violations of international humanitarian law, attributable to the private military personnel operating jointly with CAR's armed forces and in some instances UN peacekeepers," a statement said, naming Russian companies.

Related article: Russia Pulling 'Military Instructors' Out of Central African Republic

The alleged abuses identified by the Working Group on mercenaries include mass summary executions, arbitrary detentions, torture, forced disappearances, forced displacement of civilians, indiscriminate targeting of civilian facilities and attacks on humanitarian workers.

Rebels have been in retreat in the conflict-hit country since a Jan. 13 attack on the capital Bangui was thwarted.

Violence in recent months is just the latest flare-up in a civil war that has lasted eight years since the ouster of president Francois Bozize, who said this month that he had taken control of the "Coalition of Patriots for Change" rebel alliance.

The coalition brought together six of the armed groups that control much of the country in mid-December, in a bid to halt presidential and legislative elections that confirmed incumbent President Faustin Archange Touadera in power.

Thousands of people have died in the CAR since 2013 and more than a quarter of the population of 4.9 million have fled their homes.

Of these, 675,000 are refugees in neighboring countries.

'Series of violent attacks'

Government forces have been bolstered by a 12,000-strong UN peacekeeping force as well as hundreds of Russian and Rwandan paramilitaries and soldiers deployed in late December.

The UN experts said they were "deeply disturbed by the interconnected roles of Sewa Security Services, Russian-owned Lobaye Invest SARLU, and a Russian-based organization popularly known as the Wagner Group."

They spoke of concerns over their connection "to a series of violent attacks" since the Dec. 27 presidential election.

They also said they were "disturbed to learn of the proximity and interoperability between those contractors" and the UN force.

What's more, "there seem to be no investigations and no accountability for these abuses," the expert group said, saying they had relayed their concerns to Moscow, Bangui and "to the extent possible" to the companies.

Russia has denied Wagner paramilitaries have been deployed to the Central African Republic, saying only military instructors have been sent to train local soldiers.

Private army

Believed to be linked to a powerful ally of President Vladimir Putin, Yevgeny Prigozhin, Wagner has reportedly been involved in conflicts across the Middle East and Africa.

Prigozhin, 59, who has been hit with U.S. sanctions for meddling in the U.S. presidential election in 2016, denies any association with Wagner.

Although private military companies are illegal in Russia, Wagner has in recent years played an increasingly important role in realising the Kremlin's overseas ambitions, observers say.

Members of the group were reportedly dispatched alongside Russian warplanes and ground troops following Moscow's intervention in the Syrian war in September 2015 on the side of President Bashar al-Assad.

Moscow has never confirmed reports of Wagner mercenaries, but this month three campaign groups launched a criminal case in Russia against alleged members of the contractor outfit over the 2017 beheading of a man believed to have deserted from the Syrian army.

European officials have also taken note of Wagner's role in conflicts beyond Syria, slapping sanctions on Prigozhin last year for destabilizing Libya.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2021/03/31/reports-of-major-abuses-by-russian-mercenaries-in-c-af-rica-un-experts-a73429>