

Russia Restricts Activities of Plagiarism Campaigner on 'Extremism' Charges

August 29, 2022

Andrei Zayakin. Alexander Koryakov / Kommersant

A Moscow court restricted internet access and freedom of movement Monday for prominent plagiarism campaigner and journalist Andrei Zayakin, independent media outlet Novaya Gazeta Europe reported.

Zayakin, 41, was detained in Moscow on Sunday on charges of “financing extremist activities” for a 1,000 ruble ($16) donation he made to opposition leader Alexei Navalny’s Anti-Corruption Foundation.

The Anti-Corruption Foundation was dubbed “extremist” by the Russian authorities last year.

According to the ruling by Moscow’s Basmanny district court, Zayakin is prohibited from using all means of communication — including internet and written correspondence — and cannot leave his house between 8 p.m. and 8 a.m. while his case is investigated, Novaya Gazeta Europe reported.

Embed:

Andrei Zayakin, a colleague and a friend, is put under house arrest in Moscow. A well-published physicist, he has spent a decade uncovering hundreds of fake PhD degrees – many powerful people in Russia lost their fraudulent degrees thanks to him. Now he is banned to use internet. pic.twitter.com/RRJBFoEmAl

— Konstantin Sonin (@k_sonin) August 29, 2022

As well as an independent journalist, Zayakin is a co-founder of “Dissernet,” an online scientific network that works to expose plagiarism in Ph.D. theses issued by Russia’s higher education institutions and scientific articles published in the country.

Volunteers for Dissernet have found traces of plagiarism in the scientific works of many top officials, including government ministers, parliamentary deputies and top security officers.

If found guilty, Zayakin faces up to eight years in prison.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2022/08/29/russia-restricts-activities-of-plagiarism-campaigner-on-extremism-charges-a78676>