

Sanctioned Russian Buys Into Kazakh Airport in Border Region

The firm hopes to create a regional aviation hub just over the Kazakh border.

By Joanna Lillis

February 14, 2023

Manshuk Mаметова Airport in Uralsk, Kazakhstan. Ministry of Industry and Infrastructure Development of the Republic of Kazakhstan

A Russian airports operator has bought a stake in running an airport in northwestern Kazakhstan close to the Russo-Kazakh border.

With its first foreign acquisition, Russia's Airports of Regions company is hoping to develop the Oral airport as a regional hub, most likely to serve travelers affected by the shortage of flights out of Russia owing to its war in Ukraine.

The firm, owned by sanctioned Russian billionaire Viktor Vekselberg, did not specify the price or size of the stake when it announced the acquisition on Feb. 10.

But media in Kazakhstan reported that Kazakh investors will hold a controlling stake of 51% in the consortium, called Oral Airport Holding, while the Russian company holds 49%.

The Kazakh partners are entrepreneur Daulet Khan Kilybayev and a company called Uralsk Management, which is owned by Sergei Artyugin. He also heads the Oral Airport Holding consortium, which will now manage the airport for three years.

Manshuk Mametova Airport will remain the property of the state, which took it over from a company affiliated with Bek Air after that carrier was stripped of its license to operate following a fatal crash in 2019.

The Russian company offered few specifics on the acquisition. But it did say it intends to turn the airport, which currently serves around 300,000 passengers annually, into a regional aviation hub.

“The convenient location of the airport in northwestern Kazakhstan will make it possible to develop transit traffic and create a regional hub on its basis,” explained the company, which runs airports in cities around Russia including Yekaterinburg, Samara, Saratov, Orenburg, Rostov-on-Don, Nizhny Novgorod and Tobolsk.

Oral (sometimes called Uralsk) is around 25 miles from the border with Russia and has direct bus links to Samara, about four hours’ drive north.

That would make it a relatively convenient hub for travelers from cities in southern Russia and Siberia, currently restricted by a lack of flights because of the war in Ukraine.

Oral’s airport currently serves only Kazakh airlines on mainly domestic routes, with international flights to just two destinations: Phuket in Thailand and Frankfurt in Germany.

The airport has a recently completed new terminal. The investors now plan to sink money into upgrading security equipment and improving passenger and cargo infrastructure.

The involvement of a sanctioned Russian oligarch in the consortium might be bad optics for Astana, which has repeatedly stated that it will never allow Kazakhstan to become a backdoor route for sanctions-dodging by its neighbor and partner Russia.

But Kazakhstan’s government is eager to lure investors to develop airport infrastructure to meet rising demand.

The government has tapped a foundation run by Kazakh oligarch Bulat Utemuratov to fund the construction of a new airport terminal in the city of Kyzylorda in southern Kazakhstan, at a cost of $25 million. Construction is due to begin this month, and the terminal will become the property of the state after it opens next year.

This article was originally published by Eurasianet.org.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2023/02/14/sanctioned-russian-buys-into-kazakh-airport-in-border-region-a80225>