One Year of Full-Scale War in Ukraine

Eurasian Climate Brief

February 24, 2023

The war has killed hundreds of thousands, both sides included, and displaced millions of Ukrainians while plunging the rest of Europe into an energy crisis. Its environmental impacts have also been devastating, ranging from military chemical contamination and emissions to nuclear threats. In Russia, the government's swing towards totalitarianism has taken a severe toll on the climate and environmental movements. One silver lining: Europe's rush to cut historic energy ties with Russia appears to have accelerated the continent's green transition. Tune in for a special episode on this somber anniversary for a discussion between Angelina and Boris on all of the above points.
