

Russian TV Channel Removes 'LGBT' Rainbow From K-Pop Music Video

November 08, 2023

Before and after TNT Music removed the rainbow from Seventeen's music video. © HYBE LABELS

A popular Russian television channel removed the rainbow featured in a K-pop music video over concerns that it could violate the country's laws against "LGBT propaganda," Russian media reported.

TNT Music, which runs a chart show dedicated to South Korean pop music, has already been fined for violating Russia's "LGBT propaganda" laws with previous broadcasts of foreign—made music videos.

But when it recently aired the video for the boy band Seventeen's hit song "God of Music," the channel took no chances and transformed a rainbow featured in the original video into a gray cloud.

TNT Music appears to have erred on the side of caution after a Moscow courtfined its owner Fonbet TV 1 million rubles ($10,800) in July for "LGBT propaganda" when it aired Finnish singer Alma's music video for the song "Summer Really Hurt Us."

The channel faces another fine of up to 16 million rubles ($174,000) on four administrative charges of spreading "LGBT propaganda" among minors, according to Russian state media.

In 2013, Russia banned "propaganda of non-traditional sexual relations" toward minors.

Last year, President Vladimir Putin expanded the ban to outlaw public displays of non-traditional relationships and lifestyles to people of any age, not just minors.

Original url:

https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2023/11/08/russian-tv-channel-removes-lgbt-rainbow-from-k-pop-music-video-a83039