

In Photos: Russians Grapple With Heating Losses Amid Subzero Temperatures

January 17, 2024

Several cities and regions across Russia have been hit by heating outages since late December as winter temperatures have dropped well below 0 degrees Celsius. In Podolsk south of Moscow, at least 149,000 residents were left without heating, while the Siberian city of Novosibirsk has seen two incidents in one week in which boiling water has run through the streets due to burst pipes, injuring locals. Here's a look into how Russia's regions are grappling with the recent incidents:
