Russian pop star Shaman has released a new song praising North Korean leader Kim Jong Un which he performed during a concert in Pyongyang last week, according to Russian media reports and video clips released late Wednesday.

Shaman was among a group of Russian singers and dancers invited to perform before Kim at an event marking the 80th anniversary of North Korea’s ruling Workers’ Party.

“Kim Jong Un mounted the stage and expressed thanks to the Russian artists for their successful performance,” the state-run Korean Central News Agency wrote, sharing photos of the event.

Lyrics featured in an excerpt of the song posted by a Russian pop culture Telegram channel on Wednesday describe Kim as a wise leader and national savior.

“In the harsh years of war, like soldiers of one regiment, two countries — Korea and Russia — became battle-forged friends for eternity,” Shaman sings. The full three-minute version later appeared on the Telegram news channel Kontekst.

North Korea has become one of Russia’s closest allies since the full-scale invasion of Ukraine.

Pyongyang has supplied Moscow with artillery shells and missiles, according to Western intelligence officials, and last year, it sent troops to the southwestern Kursk region to help repel Ukrainian forces.

Shaman first performed in Pyongyang in August to commemorate the 80th anniversary of Korea’s liberation from Japanese colonial rule. A similar version of his new song was reportedly played during a rally in Russian-occupied eastern Ukraine.

Known for patriotic hits such as “Ya Russky” (“I’m Russian”) and “Moi Boy” (“My Fight”), Shaman, whose real name is Yaroslav Dronov, has become a symbol of wartime nationalism in Russia.

He was barred from entering Canada, the European Union and Australia in 2022. News outlets reported that he canceled several concerts in Russia to attend last week’s performance at Pyongyang’s Mansudae Art Theater.
