

Russia's Planned Tax Hike Would Put Hundreds of Thousands of Small Businesses at Risk of Closure, Lawmaker Warns

October 21, 2025

@nechaev_official

Thousands of small businesses in Russia could be forced to shut down as a result of government plans to raise the tax burden on entrepreneurs, a lawmaker warned during a meeting with Finance Minister Anton Siluanov.

Alexei Nechaev, head of the New People party, said the Finance Ministry's proposal to lower the annual revenue threshold for mandatory value-added tax (VAT) payments from 60 million to 10 million rubles ($744,000 to $124,000) would hit small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in the regions hardest.

The increase would be especially painful for individual entrepreneurs, many of whom take home less than 200,000 rubles ($2,480) per month after paying taxes and salaries, Nechaev added.

He called on the Finance Ministry to amend the 2026 budget bill before its second reading to raise the VAT threshold for small businesses, saying the change would “protect hundreds of thousands of small enterprises from closure.”

Related article: More Taxes for More War: Unpacking Russia's 2026 Budget

Nechaev also called on the government to maintain existing VAT exemptions for Russian software developers.

“If these benefits are scrapped, we’ll be shooting ourselves in the foot,” he said, warning that IT firms could be forced to cut staff and that skilled specialists might seek work abroad. “The budget could end up losing tens of billions of rubles — roughly the same amount it expects to gain.”

The Finance Ministry in late September proposed a series of tax changes as part of the draft budget for 2026–2028.

These include lowering the VAT payment threshold to 10 million rubles a year; canceling VAT exemptions for domestic software; doubling payroll insurance contributions for IT employees to 15%; introducing a new gambling tax of 5% on accepted bets and 25% on bookmakers’ profits; and raising the overall VAT rate from 20% to 22%.

Related article: Russian Regions Face Deepening Budget Crisis as Reserves Run Dry

The ministry said the measures are needed to fund the country’s “defense and security” needs amid a widening budget deficit.

The federal deficit, initially projected at 1.17 trillion rubles ($14.5 billion), or 0.5% of GDP, reached 3.79 trillion rubles ($47 billion), or 1.7% of GDP, between January and September, according to Finance Ministry data.

Government spending jumped 19.5% to 30.73 trillion rubles ($381 billion) over the same period, while revenues rose just 2.5% to 26.94 trillion rubles ($334 billion).

The ministry now expects the deficit to reach 5.7 trillion rubles ($70.7 billion), or 2.6% of GDP, by year-end.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2025/10/21/russias-planned-tax-hike-would-put-hundreds-of-thousands-of-small-businesses-at-risk-of-closure-lawmaker-warns-a90886>