

Coal Mines in Occupied Luhansk Face Risk of Closure Without $505M Injection

November 25, 2025

A miner is at work at the Dolzhanskaya-Kapitalnaya coal mine in the Luhansk region. Alexander Reka / TASS

Coal mines in the Russian-occupied Luhansk region are facing shutdown unless they receive $505 million in government financing as the industry grapples with high interest rates and low global coal prices, the RBC news website reported Tuesday.

The Donskie Ugli Trading House, the largest coal industry investor in the occupied Ukrainian territories, said it was operating at a loss and lacked funds to expand mining in deeper coal seams.

The company asked the government for 40 billion rubles in National Wealth Fund financing at a preferential 3% annual rate during an October meeting with Deputy Prime Minister Alexander Novak, RBC reported.

As an alternative, the firm proposed being included in the Treasury Infrastructure Credit program, which offers long-term loans to regional administrations for housing utilities, road repairs, hospitals and other projects at the same rate.

The government has not yet made a decision in response to Donskiye Ugli's request, an RBC source said.

Related article: Major Kuzbass Coal Mine Halts Operations, Leaving Hundreds Without Pay

If the mines close, the government suggested that the self-proclaimed Luhansk People's Republic (LNR) buy coal from Siberia's Kemerovo region instead.

But local authorities insist that coal mining in the region must be preserved.

The Energy Ministry told RBC it is still assessing whether it is economically viable to keep the Luhansk mines running, given their "unsatisfactory technical condition."

If the sites are mothballed, workers would be offered transfers to other coal enterprises or retraining for in-demand jobs.

Russia drafted a plan in 2023 to revive the coal industry in occupied territories, handing mines in the so-called Luhansk and Donetsk people's republics to private investors.

Donskiye Ugli, registered in Rostov-on-Don in 2020 by businessman Vitaly Donchenko, leased 10 mines in Luhansk.

While these assets were expected to turn profitable within five years, low global coal prices derailed those projections and the company had returned seven of its 10 mines to Luhansk authorities by 2025.

Russian banks started refusing to finance Donskiye Ugli's investment and operating needs this summer, leading to wage delays and partial staff cuts.

Kremlin-installed LNR head Leonid Pasechnik asked President Vladimir Putin to pressure commercial banks or secure alternative funding, including increased federal subsidies.

Putin in turn instructed Novak, Central Bank chief Elvira Nabiullina and Finance Minister Anton Siluanov to prepare support options and report back.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2025/11/25/coal-mines-in-occupied-luhansk-face-risk-of-closure-without-505m-injection-a91233>