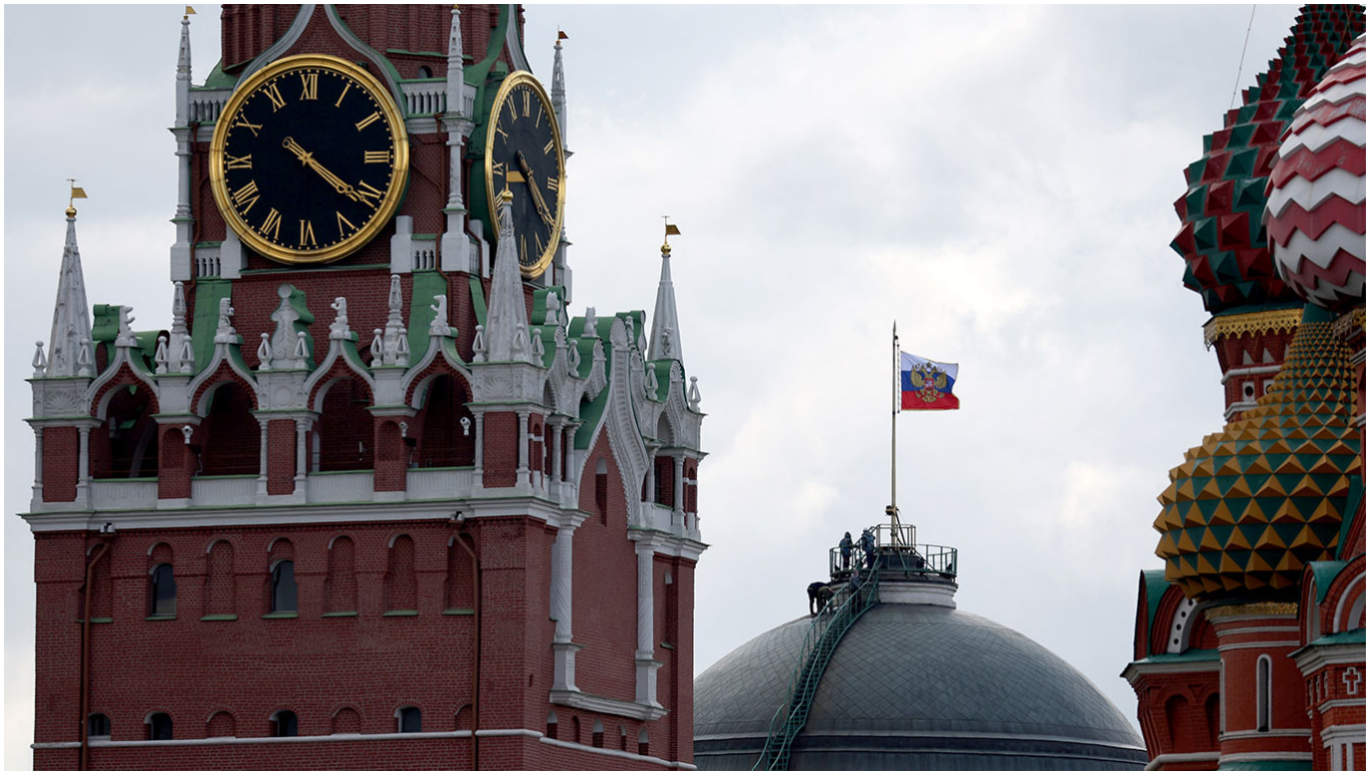
The Moscow Times
30 YEARS
INDEPENDENT NEWS FROM RUSSIA

Kremlin Says No Decision Yet on Putin's G20 Visit, Dismisses Zelensky's Meeting Proposal

By Reuters

September 12, 2026



Sergei Bobylev / TASS

Moscow has yet to decide whether Russian President Vladimir Putin will travel to the G20 summit in Miami in December, Interfax reported, citing Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov.

"We don't know yet whether we'll be going to Miami," Peskov said.

Earlier on Saturday, Kremlin foreign policy aide Yury Ushakov said the possibility of Putin attending the summit "has not even been discussed" in Moscow.

Related article: Russian Official to Attend G20 Energy Meeting in Houston Next Week, White House Official Says

In April, the Kremlin said Putin could travel to the G20 summit after U.S. President Donald Trump suggested his attendance would be very helpful.

Commenting on Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky's remarks that he would travel to Miami if Putin attends and would seek a meeting with him, Peskov reiterated Moscow's long-standing position that if the Ukrainian leader wants to meet his Russian counterpart, he should come to Moscow.

Original url:
https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2026/09/12/kremlin-says-no-decision-yet-on-putins-g20-visit-dismisses-zelenskys-meeting-proposal-a93693